

How to cite the APA 7th edition

The APA was developed in 1840 by the American Psychological Association to reference documents related to the behavioral and social sciences. Everything is used in different fields, especially in the field of humanities. This citation format is recommended in the ADE degree for the completion of the TFG an/or TFM.

The structures and examples that you will find below have been made according to the APA format of the different documentary typologies: books and book chapters; web pages, databases, computer programs and mobile applications; magazines and articles; doctoral theses and unpublished academic works; conferences; standards and patents; and legislation.

Remember:

- The latest edition of the APA standard is from 2019 (7th ed.) and presents some changes with respect to previous editions. These updates are already covered in this manual.
- If there are more than three authors, it must be added after the first author "et al."
- If there are no authors, the title will be the citation entry.
- In online resources, the access by which that resource has been consulted must always be indicated (DOI, web address, etc.).
- Note: in the 7th edition of the APA Manual, it's not necessary to include the place of publication.
